MAKING A LAWN.

Nothing contributes, so greatly to the fine grassy lawn. Flowers, shrubbery, everything falls, if the bare earth stares one in the fact at every turn. Such a sight is as unpleasant to the aesthetic sight is as unpleasant to the aesthetic tastes as is the uncovered face of the dead to the human instincts!

The old Virginia homes had lawns, trees, noble native trees, and the old-time flowers, roses, etc.

Circumstances have for more than a generation altered sadly the old Virginia idea of home making, but now on every hand people who have succeeded in restoring their fortunes are turning again to their first loves, the country home,

Miss Mary Christian. Miss Kate Torty, Mrs. Annie Gilliam, Lynchburg; Mr. and Chom making, but now over hand people who have succeeded in relative with the passing of such a generation altered sadly the old Virginia black of home making, but now one very hand people who have succeeded in relative with the passing of such a generation at the control of the manning of the control of the manning of the control o secure a good growth of grass.

The seeding of the lawn is so all im-

The seeding of the lawn is so all important and so frequently badly done that this is made the burden of our notes to-day. There is no lawn grass that compares with blue grass in our estimation. Yet, from its peculiar partiality to solis strongly limestone in character, there are many situations on which it is difficult to establish blue griss. This renders necessary at times a resort to other grasses, but I will not mention these at this time, because I a resort to other grasses, but I will not monition thesh at this time, because I want to emphasize the possibility of making a blue grass and in many untoward situations.

The grass on the lawn is of such inestimable importance that we can scarcely spend too much for it if we really are successful in our venture.

I have found that if one can secure if any, watering will be required, and the grass becomes established before the heat of the succeeding summer. The Iresent is then the season for prepara-Hereont is then the season for preparation.

Having sown the lawn properly, the next thing is to manure it. Don't trust even the best soil to make a finely set lawn without some manure. The manure should be fairly fine in texture or well rotted if one must use coarse stuff. The goil should be completely covered with the manure. If when freshly spread, it covers the soil, one-half inch deep, this will not be excessive on thin lands, but less will do on good soil. Properly preparod land seeded and manured in this manner will show a growth of srass which will cover the soil before winter and the succeeding spring will almost or quite crowd out weeds.

som end. The growth in the fruit is always easily recognized because the tissues affected become blackened as though charred, and the growth penetrates along the cell walls often to the center of the fruit.

While the occurrence on the foliage is a very serious matter, it can be treated if tatten in hand prompily, but the occurrence on the fruit practically destroys the specimens attacked. It is because of this latter fact that I write of this trouble at this season. This rot attacks frequently a large portion of the early fruit and subsides generally as the season grows cooler. This affected fruit comes into the canneries in various stages of decay, in many cases only slightly attacked. The trimmers or stock dressers try to save all the fruit they can, hence attempt to cut out the injured part of the fruit and use the remainder. It will often happen, however, that some portion of the affected tissue remains in the fruit and goes into the can.

This fungus is not easily destroyed by heat, hence the ordinary processing frequently falls to kill it, and it continues to develop in the can after the same is placed in stock. The result is swelled and burst cans, often to such extent as to nearly ruln a run of several days. This can be overcome by doubling the time of cooking, or what is better process the tematoes in a ratort and raise the temperature for about five minutes to 220 degrees Fahrenheit.

Last season losses were frequent among packers and was attributed to various causes, but I think the 'black rot' fungus was largely the cause of the trouble. General remedy-Spray with Bordeaux mixture just at first bloom; then repeat twice in ten-day periods. This will wonderfully improve the vigor and couse-quent fruitfulness of the plants, and help to stay its progress upon the fruit, but it is always present in wet seasons, especially, and requires exercise of great-care on part of packers.
